Cash for Clutter – Letting Go Pays Off

“Efficiency is Doing Better What is Already Being Done”

~ Peter F. Drucker

Profile

Retired small business owner with a passion for problem-solving, repurposing, and helping people clear space and reclaim peace of mind. Born in North Jersey and raised on the Jersey Shore, I proudly built the first and largest independently owned junk removal company in the U.S., successfully operating for over 35 years.

I now specialize in helping others turn unwanted items into unexpected cash by connecting sellers with buyers for items with notable value, arranging donations, and managing cleanouts with care, efficiency, and a focus on reducing waste. My approach is rooted in practical solutions that simplify the process, preserve value, and make letting go a little easier—and a lot more rewarding.

Professional Career

1988-2024: Owner/Operator, Consider It Done, Inc. – Cleanouts & Removal

What started as a house cleaning service to help pay for college tuition evolved into a full-scale junk removal business that I ran for 36 years—built on a brand of repurposing that traces back to my childhood, helping my mother sell our clutter at garage sales each year. I watched her stretch every dollar, work efficiently, plan, and turn everyday clutter into opportunity. Those early lessons shaped my commitment to helping others reduce waste and find value in what they no longer need—principles that became the foundation for how I live my life, run my business, and guide my customers.

Currently

I now use my experience and network to help others turn clutter into cash by connecting buyers with sellers of valuable collections and accumulations. I also provide guidance on how to resell lower-value items, arrange pick-up or delivery for donations, and coordinate quotes for the removal of anything left over. Whether clients need help with one step or the entire process, I offer full service for every pile & piece, and flexible support tailored to their needs.
